

Page 74 to 77

24th Year of Publication

DESIGN TOUCH

Eco-Fashion Jewellery

By Ms. Neeru Jain
Asst. Professor, IIS University, Jaipur

There has always been an intimate connection between textiles, clothing and jewellery. Jewellery gives a complete sense and adds beauty to whatever garments and accessories one is wearing. Whether it is costume jewellery or fine jewellery, it is the wearer's delight. Further it highlights their personality with the look that adds to their ensemble.

Eco-Fashion Jewellery By Textile Scrap is a unique concept; it demonstrates various jewellery categories — wrist accessories, ear ornaments, necklaces, etc. — and the numerous ways to make them better in terms of 'quality of design'. So we can say that by working the textile scrap we can make beautiful jewellery, as well as saving the environment from threat.

Today, the choice of materials or metals used by jewellery designers depends absolutely on the price factor. This idea revolves around mixing the inexpensive with the exotic, as it creates an interesting mix. Therefore, if a customer is looking for new and unique designs, an unusual combination of textile scrap materials could do the trick. Looking at affordable materials while designing jewellery, some alternatives could be to use likewise large coloured stone beads, enamel, wood or silver findings to form the base for textile scrap material. Basically, the choice of materials used for creating jewellery is usually theme-oriented. For instance, for a floral inspired collection, waste tissue fabric can be coated, with an exclusive golden colour, as it gives an original jewellery look.

One piece illustrated shows a combination of silver with glass beads, wooden beads and shell with black cotton fabric that gives a calm, tranquil and a modern look and feeling. The jewellery made from scrap shows how nuts, wood and satin fabric are turned into eco-friendly fashion pieces. Designers express their creativity through their unique works of art, by transforming fabric scrap into fashion accessories. They are proud to showcase their creativity and resourcefulness.

Jewellery with cotton fabric scrap

Findings with embroidered fabric scrap